

WRITON EDITORIAL NOTEBOOK

Three small ways to begin writing.

You don't need the whole plot. You need one entry point.

01 WANT

02 ACTION

03 DETAIL

Swipe for all three →

WHY THIS WORKS

The blank page isn't the problem.

Most writers stall waiting for the whole story to show up at once. It won't.

Every story starts through a single doorway — not the whole house. Here are three doorways that work, every time.

01 WANT

02 ACTION

03 DETAIL

Next: the first doorway.

01

ENTRY POINT ONE

A Character Who Wants Something

Desire creates momentum before anything else does.

The instant a character wants something — a coffee, an apology, a way out — the scene has direction, and the reader has a reason to keep going.

TRY THIS LINE

“

She wanted the last word. He was already at the door.

TONIGHT'S MOVE

Give any character one small, specific want — before you write another sentence.

02

ENTRY POINT TWO

A Small Physical Action

Fold a letter. Drop a glass. Check a phone twice.

A concrete action puts the reader in a body, in a room, in a moment — before you've explained anything at all.

TRY THIS LINE

“

He folded the letter twice before he read it once.

TONIGHT'S MOVE

Open with one small gesture. No backstory required.

03

ENTRY POINT THREE

One Unexpected Detail

Place an unusual object in an ordinary room, and the reader leans in without being told to.

A birdcage in a garage. A wedding dress in a hospital ward.

TRY THIS LINE

“

There was a birdcage in the garage, and nobody would say why.

TONIGHT'S MOVE

One odd object beats a page of description.

TONIGHT'S PRACTICE

Pick one. Write for five minutes.

A want. An action. A detail.

That's all a first line needs to earn the second one.

01 WANT

02 ACTION

03 DETAIL

Which one are you trying tonight?

Leave your opening line below.